At Toy Fair 2008

When you wander down the aisles of Toy Fair, you tend to spot some wonderful and sometimes, different toys. I have a soft spot for "out of the box" toys. Don't get me wrong, I love mainstream toys as well, but I really enjoy writing about new and unique toys. To cut a long story short, here is a handful of toys - both unique and mainstream - that appealed to me right away at Toy Fair. Do I hear someone hum "These are a few of my favorite things..." from The Sound of Music?

1. Think-Ets from Think-A-Lot Toys

Think-ets are a set of 15 assorted little trinkets that come in a portable pouch. They could be anything ranging from miniature animals to baskets to pretend play hammers and more. So, what do you actually do with Think-ets? The beauty of these little knick-knacks is that you can build all sorts of games revolving around them. One of the games that the makers, Think-a-lot Toys, suggest is making up a story about a trinket and then everyone chips turn by turn in until a pretty good yarn is spun. Another possibility is a memory game. Actually, the games are only limited by your imagination. Think-ets are great for travel, eating at a restaurant and much more. The trinkets themselves are totally charming. This is a wonderful concept indeed.
